Each year, motor vehicle crashes claim the lives of more than 44,000 people in the United States and are the leading cause of death among people ages 1 to 34 years. To portray such crashes, print and television media focus on wrecked cars or ambulances scurrying away injured victims—some fatal. These images don't illustrate injury prevention behaviors. CDC's Injury Center is now offering our partners royalty-free injury prevention images that model proper injury prevention techniques. These images will show children properly restrained in the back seat, drivers and passengers wearing safety belts, and pedestrians safely crossing the street, and others.
