My comment is that I don't feel the records that are collected through the years by IBM can be used to show the full picture. For example, My father retired from IBM Endicott after 30 years of service. After retirement, He was diagnosed with [redacted] and passed away at age 70. He was perfectly fit through out his employment with IBM until after he retired.

My Mother also and IBM employee is retired and is now 70 years old. In the last three months she has been diagnosed with [redacted] and now [redacted]. I don't feel looking at IBM industrial hygiene records tells the whole story. Both of my parents were healthy throughout their working lives and only after they retired did they experience these diseases. To add to this both of them never smoked and were physically fit. I just want to make sure that this community gets a full review. I feel there should be a more extensive review done other than the records that IBM has to make sure you are getting the full story. Thank you.
