

James H. Steele Veterinary Public Health Award

The James H. Steele Veterinary Public Health Award is named after James Steele (1913-2013), and EIS officer who was instrumental in developing the discipline of veterinary public health during his career spanning more than 70 years. This award is sponsored by CDC veterinarians, in partnership with the CDC Foundation, and recognizes a current EIS officer or alumnus who has made outstanding contributions in the field of veterinary public health or One Health disciplines, which involves a collaborative effort of multiple disciplines working to attain optimal health for people, animals, and the environment. Contributions may include investigation, control, or prevention of zoonotic diseases or other animal-related human health problems.
