

More than half of adults with fair or poor health have seen a medical provider in the past year, but not a dentist.

These adults also are more likely to have dental disease.

Medical visits may be the only opportunity to provide oral health messaging, dental screenings, and referrals.

